

Bioethics, Cultural Differences and the Problem of Moral Disagreements in End-Of-Life Care: A Terror Management Theory

Author/s: Johnstone, Megan-Jane | Year: 2012 | Publication type: Journal article | Peer reviewed: | Topic area/s: High Level Care

Reference:

Key Words:

end of life care, cultural norms

Research aim:

In this essay, attention is given to exploring why cultural differences exist, why they matter, and how health care providers should treat them in order to reduce the incidence and impact of otherwise preventable harmful moral outcomes in end-of-life care. In addressing these questions, a novel application of the renowned terror management theory will be made.

Results/Conclusion:

Implications:

Cultural Group(s):

Location of study:

Age group:

Number included in study:

N/A

Type of participants:

Research approach:

Type of data:

Secondary data sources used:

Specific scales or analytical techniques used:

Implications/ Recommendations:

Notes:

Not primary research - essay exploring differences in preferences for end-of-life care for people from different cultural backgrounds